About Korrie

Born and raised in the Pacific Northwest, I have watched the Portland-Vancouver area grow into a vibrant and friendly community that I proudly call home every day. This area draws people from around the country to add to the region's home-grown warmth and diversity. It's no wonder people want to call this area home too.

Whether you are buying or selling in this area, my expertise will guide you through the processes in's and out's. With 20 years in IT Project Management, I understand the importance of managing timelines and attention to detail. Much like IT, Real estate requires the same accountability and timely coordination. One of the keys to being a great project manager is a talent for listening. I bring this necessary skill to the table, as well as a proven ability to negotiate terms (sometimes requiring a firm approach to advocate for you) in addition to being proactive to catch potential issues ahead of time.

Along with my real estate knowledge and project background, I will go the extra mile (literally and figuratively) for you. You'll see me with a brush and roller to paint a wall or two or stage your home using furnishings and props I have assembled over the years. These added touches, along with my pricing strategy, will sell your property at a higher price and in a quicker time. Not to mention saving thousands of dollars on professional staging services. Save money and increase your home value as we cross that finish line.

The keys to a successful transaction require planning, listening, attention to detail, and proactiveness. These are the actions and qualities that make me a superior partner in filling all your real estate needs.

When I have a spare moment, I spend my time enjoying the beautiful vistas of the Pacific Northwest, hiking, and biking around the Portland area. Swimming and weightlifting in my community gym's, or spending quality time with my family and trusted pup.
